

The youthful charm and beauty of his wife Daisy has attracted the attentions of Marcel Philippe, a fashionable Parisian dressmaker. Marcel cleverly tricks Daisy and she finally agrees to leave her husband. She soon learns that she is going to bear Joe a child.

Joe drinks himself into forgetfulness with increasing frequency. Reduced to clowning with an obscure circus in the provinces, he is infuriated one evening to discover Marcel in his audience. Joe substitutes a real pistol for the toy gun he uses in his act and points it at Marcel, saying ominously, "I can shoot straight when I want to."

This is a gripping and well acted picture for home entertainment.

COMEDY

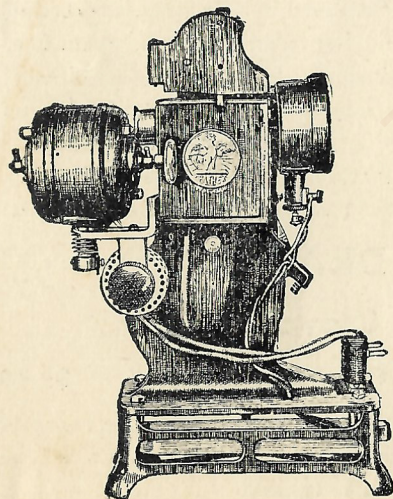

"Yankee Consul"

No. O. 4 One Super Reel $9.50

One long crescendo of chuckles. The flash-light explosion is a pippin of a gag. The motor ride is a lickety-split peach. You miss a lot if you don't see Doug MacLean. His comedy is a wiz.
